

The VA has started a program to allow Veterans to see health care professionals in the private sector, if they are not available to be seen at a VA facility in a timely manner, or if the VA does not have the specialist that they need to see at the VA facility.

One other thing that the V.A. needs to take a real hard and serious look at; is the use of Hyperbaric Oxygen Chamber Treatments for veterans diagnosed with PTSD or TBI (Traumatic Brain Injuries). There are all kinds of studies available in which such treatments are having 100% success rates with these treatments. Some states like Arizona, are passing legislation to allow veterans to be treated with HBOT (Hyperbaric Oxygen Therapy); and they are treating veterans with these diagnoses free of charge. Read about “Team Veteran Foundation” at <https://tvfaz.org/> to find out more. They ask, and answer this question: “Why would anyone prescribe 5-25 drugs daily for the treatment of Traumatic Brain Injury (TBI) and or Post Traumatic Stress (PTS) when there are drug-free alternatives used around the world (except in the US) like Hyperbaric Oxygen Therapy (HBOT)?”

I personally had a severe Traumatic Brain Injury and Severe PTSD. I was lucky enough to be treated by a civilian doctor who was doing research on HBOT treatments. I know for a fact this treatment saved and changed my life. If it helped me, I am positive it could help save and change the lives of others.

The VA has a long arduous road, all uphill, ahead of it; before they will be able to provide the quality of care that our nations Veterans deserve and have earned. A Veterans Administration charged with caring for our nations Veterans, which chose a phrase to guide them that is derived from a speech by President Abraham Lincoln, which is “to care for he who has borne the cost of the battle, and his widow, and his orphan.”
